Dan -- Two questions leapt out at me from this report:

--The statement that in a few years, the non-community water supplies will have a serious cost hit them for total coliform (bacterial) compliance and no funding to address it. Is that something we should be looking at trying to support in longer-term budgets?

--The fact that we are not hitting our goals for avoiding acute health risks for water quality (not hitting 95% compliant). Is this mostly the Flint problem showing up in the stats or are there other areas with drinking water quality acute problems?

--Valerie
