Those properties were my fault this time. I sent it over and never thought to do it. My apologies.

That has been updated.

Actually, the PDF did not have the Document Properties, but I was able to take them from the last version. Obviously, we are in the middle of an important issue right now, but for future reference, you can find the Document Properties by right clicking on any PDF and a info box will appear:

If you have Adobe Acrobat Standard or Professional you should be able to complete these fields in any PDF that you open. If you don't have either of those programs, they can be filled in using PDF Creator when documents are converted from Word to PDF. Not sure about how this works with other programs such as Illustrator.

Hi Josh and Bob,

Here's an updated version. Bob – are the properties right on this? I'm not sure how to check ☺

Dave – this is the handout we will have for the press event tomorrow.

Thanks, Bob. Good to know. We'll double check that moving forward.

That document has been updated with this latest version on the Flint Water web page.

One request though: in the future, I will not be posting PDFs to the website that are sent to me that do not have completed Document Properties (Title, Author, Subject and Key Words.)

This is an ADA Compliance issue and one that eMichigan has been very adamant about state webmasters following. (If you have questions about this, please contact Ellen Martin in eMichigan and she can provide you with a more detailed explanation of the policy.) In the rush to get these documents posted last week I was willing to overlook this for the sake of getting the site put together quickly, but would prefer not to have the take the extra step myself and fill those in while guessing at a correct title or author.

Thank you.
