Hey Brad:

I saw it, and it's really not contradictory to anything we've written. We just didn't do an independent test.

We've said multiple times that the city had just one sampling site out of compliance for TTHM during its last round of testing.

That said, water protests, the large number of residents speaking out at public meetings and multiple water giveaways are keeping the issue in the news.

From what I'm seeing and hearing, there's at least as much -- if not more concern -- from residents about the color, taste and smell of the water as with TTHM.

That said, I'll call next week for sure. I'm expecting there are going to be some developments then.

Hey, Ron.
 I'm sure you saw this today?

Please keep me in mind and get in touch before you guys do another bit on Flint water?
 The narrative seems to be getting well off the rails in a few places, I've got some info to share.
