Ok let me know when. I'll need to contact Treasury for some of the information. I'm not sure I understand the position that Brad wants to present.

Seems we've reached that part of the conversation -- what would it take to get the number of outstanding revolving loan funds from around the state

A dollar figure for what those loans represent

The number of communities with loan applications pending with us right now

Total dollars requested.

Total available in the corpus of the fund today.

I know it's a lot. But This dialogue is happening in a vacuum. It needs to be broadened so folks can understand what this means, what it sets up, and who will sacrifice. A foal 'No' from EPA won't get us there. Help?

FLINT, MI -- U.S. Rep. Dan Kildee says the state may have the authority to forgive Flint's $22 million in remaining water loans, potentially freeing up that money for "immediate water infrastructure improvements."

"We don't know if the state would grant relief, (but) we don't want to be in a position where they think they don't have the authority," Kildee said today, April 8.

The congressman asked U.S. Environmental Protection Agency Administrator Gina McCarthy for clarification on whether the debt can be forgiven, citing two provisions in federal law that could allow Gov. Rick Snyder to take action because of Flint's status as a disadvantaged community.

Kildee said he made the request in a March 26 letter to the EPA.

MLive-The Flint Journal could not immediately reach an agency representative for comment.
