Subject: Re: Hospital tests

Looping in folks- I don't think you get hospital level reports- and note that the hospitals have varying pediatric numbers...

Please respond ASAP folks!

The questions are below in the chain:

- 1) The total tested through the hospitals?
- 2) Of those tested through the hospitals, how many were under 16?
- 3) Of the kids under tested through the hospitals, how many showed higher levels of lead?
- Finally, 4) Of the total numbers tested, how many were Medicaid recipients?

Can we tell, based on the reporting lab/provider info, which were done by hospitals? If so, can we breakdown those tests by the questions above (age, EBLL, Medicaid)?

The governor's team has some follow up questions about the testing that's been completed by the hospitals. Are these numbers we can pull?

Hi Jen,

Harvey has some questions about the tests. Is this information we can provide him?

Dave,

Thanks. Of the numbers tested, could you get me the following info:

- 1) The total tested through the hospitals?
 - 2) Of those tested through the hospitals, how many were under 16?
 - 3) Of the kids under tested through the hospitals, how many showed higher levels of lead?
- Finally, 4) Of the total numbers tested, how many were Medicaid recipients?

I know it's a lot, but this will help us better explain results should the hospitals release its own data. Also, this will help us how to better target awareness information for more residents to get tested.

 Harvey Hollins III, Director

 Hi Harvey,

I checked with DHHS. The department's data includes information from the two hospitals. But, the hospitals could in theory issue their own release using just their own tests.
